Bhatia's Short Battery of Intelligence

There are many performance and intelligence tests. One of them is "Bhatia's battery of performance tests and intelligence". It was developed by Dr C.M. Bhatia. He provided norms for this test, for both literate and illiterate subjects. Murthy (1966) proposed that the original test can be reduced to 2 tests and still get significant results. This short battery consists of 2 subtests: Koh's block and Alexander's Pass-A-Long tests. Three aspects are tested in this short battery: general mental ability, spatial factors and memory.

In the original battery, there are 5 sub-tests: Koh's block, Alexander's Pass-A-Long, Pattern drawing, Immediate memory span and picture construction. Koh's block design measures abstract reasoning, Pass-A-Long test measures practical ability. Both picture construction and pattern drawing measure spatial ability and immediate memory span measures short term memory.

The test gives a performance quotient, which is similar to Intelligence Quotient. The test requires 45-60 minutes for administration.
